Special Issue

Ecological Sustainability of Urban Landscape and Its Contribution to Human Health

Message from the Guest Editors

This research topic aims to present and discuss methods and effects of promoting sustainability in landscape ecosystems, to explore the interactions between natural ecological systems and socioecological systems, and to explore the patterns of social and emotional processes that promote landscape sustainability. This topic aims to provide new ways to study the sustainability of landscape ecosystems in the context of climate change.

Potential topics include, but are not limited to:

- Methods and principles of landscape ecological restoration;
- Application of new technologies for sustainability of landscape ecosystems;
- Composition and critical mechanisms of natural ecological systems and socio-ecological systems in the landscape;
- Interaction of natural ecological systems and socioecological systems in the landscape;
- The relationship between sustainability of landscape ecosystems and human well-being.
