

Special Issue

Urban Planning and Economic Development

Message from the Guest Editor

This Special Issue will show research outcomes about urban planning policies and experiences as a result of the interaction between planning and economic development in a large sense, from a regional and metropolitan scope to small-scale urban projects for economic development. UN-Habitat New Urban Agenda highlights the role of sustainable urban planning to foster international, national, subnational, and local economic development in different ways. Urban policies and planning contribute to increasing economic productivity, creating urban new employment and fostering competitive urban economy. Therefore, this Special Issue will publish research focused on the economic approach to urban planning and development. Accordingly, the Special Issue invites original papers on conceptual approaches, theoretical frameworks, empirical research, and case studies of cities from all around the world, which advance our current understanding of urban sustainable development from a comprehensive perspective.
