Inclusive and Accessible Tourism: Strategies for Equitable Experiences

Message from the Guest Editors

With societies becoming increasingly diverse in recent years, tourism planning, design, and management have called for greater inclusivity and accessibility. To achieve this, tourism must offer equitable experiences that will respect and accommodate the needs of all travelers, regardless of their age, gender, physical ability, cultural background, or socio-economic status. Although there have been global advancements in tourism development and innovation, millions of people from across the world still face physical, cultural, or financial barriers that limit their ability to fully travel. Inclusive and accessible tourism is not just a matter of infrastructure or policy; it is a human rights imperative and a key driver of sustainable tourism development. This Special Issue aims to explore the multidimensional aspects of inclusive and accessible tourism through critical, interdisciplinary, and practice-based perspectives. We seek theoretical, empirical, and methodological research that advances the discourse on equitable access and inclusive travel experiences for all, including both original research and review articles.
