Special Issue

Emerging Environmental Pollutants and Their Impact on Human Health

Message from the Guest Editors

This Special Issue of Toxics is dedicated to advancing knowledge on the human health impacts of emerging contaminants. We invite original research articles, reviews, and case studies that address critical aspects of this field, including (but not limited to):

- Toxicokinetics and toxicodynamics of emerging contaminants in humans;
- Epidemiological studies linking exposure to health outcomes;
- Development of biomarkers for exposure and effect;
- Mechanisms of action and their links to chronic diseases:
- Interaction between multiple contaminants and synergistic health effects;
- Vulnerable populations (e.g., children, pregnant women, elderly) and differential health impacts;
- Epigenetic and transgenerational effects of contaminants:
- Influence of emerging contaminants on microbiome health and its implications for overall well-being;
