

Special Issue

Environmental and Health Effects of Heavy Metal

Message from the Guest Editors

This Special Issue aims to be multidisciplinary in its approach covering the latest research on the behavior of metals in the environment, their cycles and pathways, whether rural or urban, industrial or agricultural, and their effects on human health. Research areas may include (but are not limited to) the following:

- Heavy metals in diverse environmental media (e.g., particulate matter, soil, road dust, indoor dust, water, plants);
- Monitoring and analysis of heavy metals in the environment;
- Source identification and apportionment of heavy metals;
- Heavy metal speciation, mobility, oral and respiratory bioaccessibility;
- Human exposure to heavy metals and effects on human health;
- Bioindicators and biomarkers for assessment of heavy metal pollution;
- Heavy metal impact on ecosystems and remediation techniques.
