Message from the Guest Editors

Dear Colleagues,

The  $\Lambda$ CDM model, or Concordance Model, is a successful model, describing the Universe's large-scale structure formation and evolution, the state of the early Universe, and the abundance of the different forms of matter and energy. It is in agreement with a plethora of observations, and its predictive power has been already checked against old and new discoveries (e.g., lensing of the CMB, B-mode polarization, and the kinetic SZ effect). However, these successes do not allow for us to state that the model is correct. It merely implies that deviations from  $\Lambda$ CDM are too small compared with the current observational uncertainties to be inferred from cosmological data alone. [...]
