Advances in Small Animal Dermatology

Message from the Guest Editor

Dermatology is a discipline characterized by growing importance in veterinary medical activity and constant (and particularly rapid) progress in terms of knowledge thanks to specific and vigorous clinical research. This Special Issue of Veterinary Sciences, titled Advances in Small Animal Dermatology, will publish original articles, brief communications, case reports, case series, and reviews on the latest studies on skin diseases in companion animals. It will encompass all aspects of veterinary dermatology: preclinical and clinical research, as well as diagnosis and treatment of various skin disorders, including but not limited to allergies, infections, ectoparasites, otitis, skin oncology, congenital anomalies, or cutaneous manifestation of systemic diseases. Based on your expertise in this field, we think you can effectively contribute to the success of this initiative. We also hope that this collection will stimulate closer collaboration between researchers in veterinary and medical sciences in addressing this important topic in small animal medicine.

About the Journal

Message from the Editor-in-Chief

Veterinary Sciences (ISSN 2306-7381) is an international and interdisciplinary scholarly open access journal that aims at publishing research in all fields of veterinary medicine in a democratic way. We encourage scientists to publish their original research articles, reviews, communications, and short notes in as much detail as possible. Articles submitted that involve subjecting animals to unnecessary pain or suffering will not be accepted, and all articles must be submitted with the necessary ethical approval (please refer to the Ethical Guidelines for more information).
