

Special Issue

Co-production in Child and Adolescent Mental Health

Message from the Guest Editors

For the proposed Special Issue, we welcome papers that focus on these aspects of co-production within child and adolescent mental health. Of particular interest are papers that discuss the ethical dilemmas that may result from the implementation of co-production within child and adolescent mental health. Furthermore, we welcome various methodological approaches (quantitative, qualitative, mixed methods, reviews, and perspectives/discussions) to provide further insight into the topic of co-production in order to support mental health service providers working with this population to work and approach their work in a recovery-orientated manner. The key findings will provide stakeholders (youth, service providers, and management) with insight into how co-production can work with this population group given the ethical constraints that may be associated with its implementation here.

About the Journal

Message from the Editor-in-Chief

Youth is an international and peer-reviewed journal covering a broad range of topics that all influence persons lumped into the category of youth. The numerous issues of interest to the research community involving youth include mental health, education, sociology, economics, employment, cultural studies, civic engagement, and other social perspectives of youth and young adulthood.

Our goal is to work together with the global research community whose interest and scholarship speak to providing evidence that will support and enhance the lives of youth and the systems that affect their lives. We are interested in working with graduate students, scholars, scientists, and research centers who share this interest.
